THE children of the staff of Chong Hwa Independent High School, Kuala Lumpur, have always enjoyed free education at the school. With the school's growth and increase in employees, the cumulative expenditure for this privilege has become substantial.

As a sign of appreciation for the teachers working there, Ekovest Berhad formed the "Ekovest Chinese Education Endowment Project" to support the school in continuing free education for school employees.

As part of the Ekovest's CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) project, 62 students were awarded scholarships for school tuition fees and miscellaneous items amounting to RM259,680.

The company's managing director Datuk Seri Lim Keng Cheng, who is also chairman of the school board of directors, said that this event aimed to set an example for corporations.

"It's not about the money, but it is about the spirit of giving back.

"I also want the public to know more about the challenging history of Chinese independent schools.

"I hope this will encourage other corporations to help," he said, after presenting the mock cheque at a ceremony held at the school.

He also added that he used to be a student who benefited from scholarship funds, and was now giving back to the community.

Also present at the ceremony was Deputy Women, Family and Community Development Minister

Chew, who happened to be a former teacher of Chong Hwa Independent High School, spoke on how being a teacher was one of her toughest jobs.

She commended the effort and initiative by Ekovest.

"I think this project focuses on the spirit of CSR.

"It's not only about supporting education, but also about being charitable.

"The development of the country is a joint effort from every body," she added.

Chong Hwa Independent High School principal Chia Song Choy said that Ekovest executive chairman Tan Sri Lim Kang Hoo's generosity is a strong recognition of Chinese school education.

He urged students to follow the example set by Lim.

"Remember to give back to the school and society in future when you have achieved success," he said.
